What's new in GameGuru - Trees, Plants Amp; Rocks Pack:

 02 Welcome to GameGuru! You may have started with a simple, open world game, and have no idea what your next step may be. This page is devoted to helping you find your next step. Your new game has a lot of stuff going on! Are all trees the same height? Do all rocks look the same in a landscape? Do plants grow in the same way in their habitats? If you want to prevent this, what should you do? When I first started making a game, I thought, well, I'll just start with a level that has pretty landscapes, and add more everytime I release a new feature. When I started adding more and more, I found I could find the mountains and the ocean and the land and the ponds and the forests and the plants and the rocks and the monsters by looking for the "things" (that's what they called them in the old days...). As I grew tired of making simple landscapes, with only a few things to look at, I started adding features. They didn't all work out by some magical process... They broke something in another part of the code, or they didn't support something that I didn't realize they couldn't yet. You may find that you need to start from scratch and go through this process again, if at all possible. Include Your Non-Game Features (such as terrain, trees, plots, items, etc) If you are updating this map for the first time, or have forgotten how many of your own trees, rocks or plants have appeared before, or left out the facilities you have on your map, then it's already been updated. Go to something else. If you want to have your map start out with all your own trees and plot marks and rocks and that first garden (Which may not have trees, plots, etc), then find another map. It's likely that the map in the list below is better written and generated than your own map, if no other map is listed. If no map is listed, means we did not find a map with a map title we liked. Good luck! Medium: The medium level category has pretty landscapes and a mountain range, which can contain several other challenges (such as lakes, rivers, and/or cliffs). What about the trees and objects on the mountains? Are all trees the same height? Do all rocks look the same in the landscape? Do all plots have
